CLASS COMMITTEE.

CHARLES EDWIN STRATTON, Class Secretary.
JOHN DAVIS WILLIAMS.
JOHN MARSHALL WHITTEMORE, Jr.

The Secretary's address is 68 Devonshire Street, Boston, Mass.

110 Congress Street.

Classmates:

Here is our seventh Report. Its imperfections and shortcomings, so far as I am responsible for them, I trust you will attribute to lack of time, on my part, rather than of good-will. Your answers to my circular were, as usual, somewhat meagre, but it was pleasant to have all but four of our ninety-seven surviving graduates send some answer, however short. I wish to thank particularly those who wrote me letters, not only for their contributions to the Report, but also for their kindly expressions of regard to me personally; they gave me great pleasure, and I am sorry to acknowledge them only in this general way.

Our death rate continues very low; but this is small consolation to the friends of E. H. Clark, Holden and Otis, who never more will join us at Commencement-time.

One hundred and ninety six children have been born to the Class — more than twice the present number of us survivors.

It may cheer the hearts of the miserable little band of twenty bachelors to know that the girl baby to whom the Class cradle was given is well on her way to nineteen years, and that next year will find five other daughters of the Class eighteen years old; whether the hearts of these young ladies will be much cheered by the twenty bachelors is another question.

And now, wishing you, one and all, health, peace and prosperity, I am

Very truly yours,

CHARLES E. STRATTON,

Class Secretary.

Record of the Class.

JUNE, 1881—JUNE, 1886.

SAMUEL APPLETON BROWNE ABBOTT. Born 1846.

He has continued in the practice of the law at Boston.

DANIEL PUTNAM ABERCROMBIE. Born 1844.

He has been Cashier of the Crocker National Bank, at Turner's Falls, Mass., during the last five years, and Treasurer of the Crocker Institution for Savings. He has a second child, Frederick Clapp, born September 19, 1882.

FRANCIS BENJAMIN ARNOLD. Born 1844.

Since 1881 he has been a broker, principally in coffee, in New York City. He resided on Staten Island from 1881–4, but since then in New York.

ELISHA DILLINGHAM BANGS. Born 1844.

He has continued to reside at Winchester, Mass., and to be engaged in banking at Boston.

BENSON BERIAH BANKER. Born 1843.

He has been teaching school at Boston, and is now employed at the City Hospital there. His youngest child, William Franklin Clark, was born December 27, 1883.

GEORGE BATCHELOR. Born 1836.

He writes the Secretary: "The 'affectionate curiosity' which I cherish in regard to the fortunes and achievements of my classmates is unbounded; but the additions which I shall be able to make to the class record will be few and of little interest. Four years ago, after a quiet and happy ministry of sixteen years in old Salem, I was called to its dramatic opposite in the pulpit of Unity Church, Chicago. I went to a great opportunity with great hopes. But within the first year, after exposure to sewer gas, I broke down, was sick one winter with malarial fever, and then, after vainly struggling for two years to do my work, resigned, and sought repose at Wellesley Hills, where I still live. During the current year I have been 'Lecturer on the Ethics of the New Testament' at the Divinity School of Harvard University. My contributions to literature have been mostly of an ethical character, and are printed in our Unitarian journals."

GEORGE CONWAY BENT. Born 1844.

He has continued to live at Harrisburg, Penn. Until October, 1884, he was in business with the Pennsylvania Steel Company; since then he has been Chief Clerk in the office of the Superintendent of the Middle Division of the Pennsylvania Railroad.

WILLIAM BLAIKIE. Born 1843.

He has continued to live at Englewood, N. J., and to practise law at New York. May, 1879, Harper Brothers published his book, "How to Get Strong and How to Stay So," and over 50,000 copies of it have been sold, "which I think is more than of any other athletic book ever written." About January 1, 1881, he published "Sound Bodies for Our Boys and Girls," a manual for school use. He has lectured upwards of one hundred times in the past three years on physical culture, before schools, colleges, universities, churches, lyceums, Young Men's Christian Associations and general audiences. His sixth child, Mary Kerr, was born

November 5th, 1883: and he regards the space given to children in the Secretary's circular "ludicrously small."

HENRY GORHAM BLAIR. Born 1843.

He lived at Omaha, Nebraska, until November, 1884, then at Philadelphia, and has continued clerk in the Quartermaster's Department, United States Army.

WILLIAM PAYNE BLAKE. Born 1846.

He has continued to practise law at Boston, and to reside at Canton, Mass. He is the author of "Practice and Pleading in Personal Actions in the Courts of Massachusetts; second edition, revised and enlarged. Boston: Published by George B. Reed, 1883" [with Chas. H. Walcott, H. U., 1870]. And of "The Law of Insanity in its Application to the Civil Rights and Capacities and Criminal Responsibility of the Citizen. Boston: Little, Brown & Co., 1885."

*EDWARD HENRY CLARK was born in Cincinnati, Ohio, July 10, 1843. His mother dying when he was an infant, he was placed in the care of two paternal aunts, who lived in Temple Street, Boston, where his boyhood was spent. He attended the Mayhew Grammar School, in Hawkins Street, and graduated from that school in 1857, being a Franklin medal scholar. He then entered the English High School, where he took the full three years' course, graduating in 1860, being also a Franklin medal scholar in this school.

Up to the time of his graduation from the English High School it had not been his intention to go to college, and after his graduation from this school he went to live with his father, who had remarried and was then living in St. Louis, Mo. Here he resolved to go to college, and at once began studying Greek and Latin to prepare himself for admission to Harvard. He continued those studies at St. Louis until the spring of 1861, when Missouri became the theatre of such active operations between the loyal and rebel forces in the war of the Rebellion that his father sent him and his sister East for safety. He returned to live with his aunts in Temple Street, Boston, and became a pupil in the Boston Latin School in May or June, 1861, graduating from this school in the class of 1862, being again a Franklin medal scholar. He entered Harvard in July, 1862, and graduated in July, 1866.

After graduating from college he returned to St. Louis, where he began the study of law and also became a private tutor. In the course of a few months he became a teacher in one of the public schools in St. Louis, and was soon promoted to the position of principal. He continued in this position until the spring of 1869, when he resigned. In the summer of this year he returned to the East and went to Salisbury, Mass., the place where he usually spent his summer vacations, this having been his father's early home. In the fall of this year he went to New York, and became the teacher of Greek and Latin in Hasbrouck's Academy in Jersey City, N. J. He continued in this position five or six years, and while thus engaged he entered the Columbia College Law School, in the City of New York, took the regular two years' course, graduating in 1872, and being admitted to the bar in the City of New York in June of that year. After leaving Hasbrouck's Academy, he taught in several private schools in the City of New York, and was also for several years a teacher in one of the public night schools, during all of which time he had private pupils to whom he acted as tutor.

He died in the City of New York on the thirteenth day of April, 1885, his death being the result of an accident. He was living in an apartment-house the stairs of which were quite steep and the banisters more than ordinarily low. Coming in late at night, after the lights in the hall had been turned out, he in some way made a misstep on the stairs, fell over the banisters, and landed on the marble floor three flights below. He was picked up unconscious, and remained insensible, or at least unable to speak, until three o'clock on the following afternoon, when he died from very severe internal injuries. Several of his ribs and his right arm were broken. He was buried at Salisbury.

While he was quite a small boy, attending the Mayhew Grammar School, he became an enthusiast in gymnastic exercises and a regular attendant at Boldt's gymnasium, at the corner of Tremont and Eliot Streets, and continued his attendance there until he entered college. He distinguished himself in the athletic exercises at this gymnasium, taking prizes at nearly every exhibition. It was here that he laid the foundation of the very hardy constitution that marked him through life. He never had any serious sickness and hardly knew what it was to feel ill. He naturally became prominent at once in the gymnasium in college, and it was almost a matter of course that he had a place on one of the crews when the interest in intercollegiate boating was revived, chiefly by his college class, after having slumbered for several years without any contest between Harvard and Yale.

When these annual contests were revived in 1864, he pulled in the Sophomore class crew that was victorious over Yale at Lake Quinsigamond. This crew became the university crew of the following year, and he rowed in the boat that was beaten by Yale's famous Wilbur Bacon crew at Lake Quinsigamond in 1865. He remained on the university crew of the following year and pulled in the race which carried the Harvard colors to victory under Blaikie's stroke at Lake Quinsigamond in 1866. He retained his interest in athletics to the end, always found great pleasure in attending such sports, and followed the annual contests between Harvard and Yale with scarcely less enthusiasm than he did when in college.

Though he was admitted to the bar, he never made any very serious attempt to practise the profession. He occupied a desk in the office of classmate Stafford for about three months one summer, and spent about an equal length of time in another office a year later. After this he relinquished all design of following the law as a calling and accepted teaching as a permanency.

He always remained a great reader of fiction, and kept himself familiar with all matters of passing public interest, and was fond of discussing them. He kept through life the same amiable, genial, sociable nature that marked him as a boy at school and through the years at Harvard. Nothing else afforded him so much pleasure, or was so great a temptation to him, as to give pleasure to any one with whom he happened to be. When he could do this he was happy and would forget and neglect everything else. This was undoubtedly his one peculiar trait that prevented him from becoming a brilliant success in the worldly sense of the term. He was universally popular with every one in all the positions he occupied, and was very efficient and successful as an instructor. He always longed to go back to meet the class at the commencement-time reunions, and the circumstances that deterred him from doing this seemed almost the only thing that ever made him seriously sad. M. P. S.

*JOHN CLARK. Born at Boston, August 1, 1844. Died at Cambridge, Mass., July 22, 1870.

He is the author of "Building Superintendence," published in 1884, and has contributed to the editorial and other pages of the American Architect. FREDERICK DABNEY. Born 1846.

He continued to practise law in Boston until February, 1884, when he took up his residence in New York City, and became a wholesale dealer in lamps. October 8, 1885, he was admitted to the New York bar, and since then has been practising law. He has lately formed a partnership with Mr. John Fowler, Jr., under the style of Fowler & Dabney. November 8, 1882, at Boston, he was married to Isabelle G. Vezin, widow of Alfred Vezin, and daughter of Constant and Isabella A. (née Mann) Guillou, all of Philadelphia.

On June, 1881, he resigned the presidency of Antioch College, to accept the professorship of Ancient Languages in the Ohio State University, at Columbus, where he has since lived. In 1883 the duties of the chair were divided, and he was made Professor of Latin Language and Literature, which he still holds, and, in addition, has the oversight of the Library of the University. November 4, 1881, his wife, Eunice H. (Ransom) Derby, died. December 27, 1883, he was married to Frances Gage Janney, daughter of John J. and Rebecca A. S. Janney, of Columbus, O. He has a son, Walter Janney, born October 23, 1884. He writes: "My life has been marked by few incidents of interest to others; with the exception of one great sorrow it has been a happy one. I count myself fortunate in that it has been spent largely amid congenial surroundings, in work that was not disagreeable and with pleasant and inspiring associates. During the past year I have been building a house for myself, upon which I confidently expect to receive the sympathetic condolence of such members of '66 as have tried a similar experiment. I hope at length to be able to say: 'Quare agite, O tectis, iuvenes, succedite nostris.'"

LEWIS SEAVER DIXON. Born 1845.

He has continued to practise as an oculist at Worcester, Mass., till 1883, since then at Boston.

He has served on the Board of Trustees of the State Primary and Reform Schools, on that of the State Almshouse and Workhouse, and on the Board of Directors of the Public Institutions of Boston. September 18, 1883, he was married, at Lynn, Mass., to Sarah Catherine Iasigi, daughter of the late Joseph and Emilie Iasigi, of Boston. He has two children, Joseph, born August 4, 1884, and Sarah Catherine, born July 31, 1885.

EDWARD WALDO EMERSON. Born 1844.

He writes: "Since the summer of 1882 I have discontinued the practice of medicine, except as a consulting physician, and devoted my time principally to the study of art, first with our classmate, Crowninshield, and later, at the School of Drawing and Painting at the Museum of Fine Arts, in Boston. During the past winter I gave the course of lectures on Art Anatomy at this School. Since my father's death I have assisted his literary executor in the preparation of the recent edition of his works and in the examination or disposition of his manuscripts. In the summer of 1882 I had the pleasure of being received as an honorary member into the Phi Beta Kappa Society."

He has two children, born since the last Report, Florence, born October 29, 1882, and William Forbes, born May 26, 1884.

He writes: "Many persons of wealth obliged to live in Colorado, because of pulmonary troubles, are making permanent homes for themselves here, and the town, by virtue of its magnificent scenery and the character of its residences, is already the most attractive town between the Mississippi and California, and bids fair to become soon one of the most beautiful in America. Our classmate, Peabody, has done a great deal for the architectural beauty of the town. My house is close by Colorado College, which he designed; one of my church officials lives in a residence also designed by him; our superb and far-famed hotel, "The Antlers," was also his work; and when I go to Denver the Union Depot again reminds me of the Marshal of '66. I am glad to say that we have started a Colorado Harvard Club, which had its first supper in Denver last winter, and bids fair to furnish a pleasant annual reunion to the fellows who are two thousand miles away from the dear old college, but whose affection for it is only increased by the distance of our separation."

*ARTEMAS ROGERS HOLDEN, Jr.

"Died — Hobbs. — March 15, 1884, of pneumonia, Artemas R Holden, Jr son of Artemas R and the late Susan A. Holden 30 years 6 months."

These words came with sad force to his classmates and friends, who one week before had seen him in their midst in the vigor of his splendid manhood.

There is little need to tell to his class the story of Holden's life. Selecting the law at graduation, he has passed his quiet, unassuming life in Boston, steadily rising in his chosen profession, and ever drawing nearer to him a circle of business and social friends, who have learned with each year to value more and more the integrity, the power, the solid worth, of the man.

We all remember the peculiar quaintness of his manner, which made him almost a problem to us, until we knew him well. We all remember his habit of silence in society, and his suddenly entering the conversation with some remark of instant wit, some brief, incisive, sentence, almost epigrammatic, which always seemed to strike the exact centre of the subject, if he chose to speak at all.

In college days we thought him too independent, too abrupt, and would often call him "odd," "eccentric."

It was in the maturity of our lives that we discovered that this very abruptness, this very incisiveness of speech, this very directness, with which Holden would always insist upon the exact fact, was the key-note of his character. This key-note was a thorough belief in the truth at all times, a thorough contempt for the slightest appearance of deceit or pretence. When, with this attribute, we remember Holden's clear and active mind, his knowledge of law, his power of application, his physique, capable of any demands, we can see the secret of his professional success. And when we consider the manhood which Holden's ability would develop from this key-note of truth and probity, we understand how, year by year, his family, his business associates, his social friends, have clung closer to him, depended more and more upon him. We had learned to seek in him the staunch friend, the patient listener, the sure adviser, as our need might be. We had learned to turn to him, to depend on him, in our perplexities and in our cares.

But, now that he is dead, many of us discover that we had expected even more of this man, our friend. Relying on his strength of body and of mind, we had comforted the thought of our own deaths with the belief that in Holden we should leave a faithful guardian for the safety of those who had depended on us. So surely did those who knew him best rely upon him.

Dying in his fortieth year, he bequeathes to his class the record of a well-spent life.

E. F. P.

Holden had great powers of observation and a very retentive memory; he had also read more than most persons of his age, readily absorbing and assimilating what his mental instincts adjudged to be valuable, throughout an extraordinary range of subjects. In these pursuits, from a very early age, he was stimulated and guided by the precepts and example of his mother, who was a woman of great intellect, varied culture, and of sound sense.

As a lawyer, he was keen, shrewd and profound, well versed in the origin and scope of general principles, and skilful in applying them to the manifold questions arising in general practice.

He had devoted from the start especial attention to the law of real property and probate matters, for the investigation of which he was peculiarly qualified, so that, at his death, his knowledge upon these branches of the law was very accurate and complete. It can be certainly said, that, had his life been spared, he would have taken very high rank in these departments of the profession.

But his friends will best remember him, not for his stores of knowledge, not for his shrewd and sagacious advice, not even for his quaint and merry wit, which made him always a charming companion, but rather for the fidelity, loyalty and truth of his character.

He did not make many intimate friends, but to those whom he did regard as such his life was devoted. The depth and intensity of his affections were proved by the manner of his death.

The decease of his mother, from disease induced by a distressing accident, was a terrible blow to him, from the shock of which he had not recovered when he himself, a few weeks after, was stricken with pneumonia, and none of those who knew his remarkable physical vigor, which had promised for him a long and useful life, can doubt that the intensity of his grief had weakened his hold on life.

He was a brave, true, man, and his memory will be cherished as such by the Boston Bar and by many other friends.

Y., where I had spent eleven years. For the summer I took charge of All Saints' Memorial Church, in the Highlands of Navesink, N. J. In the fall, accepted the rectorship, but with the understanding that I need not reside in the parish except during the summer months. The winter following was passed in Dresden, Germany, my whole family being with me. Next summer we were once more in Navesink. In the fall we came to New Haven for the winter. Then another summer in Navesink; and again, last fall, we came to New Haven. Have had no public offices; have written no books; received no degrees. Nor can I think of any incidents that could possibly interest any of you.

"Hope you will have a good appetite for the supper, and that not very many of you will have to think about your digestion. That is a point, however, on which twenty years (Twenty years! Just think of it!) can make a very appreciable difference. I don't expect to come to the supper, though I should very much like to see you all. I wonder how many I should recognize! Please present my greetings."

Here, besides attending to my duties as Episcopal minister, I have recently opened (by request of the two Bishops of the State) the Diocesan Female Seminary, which, though but eight months old, is generally admitted to have most hopeful prospects of success. The teachers are most capable and the scholars are rapidly increasing in numbers."

He has also published studies for voices. He has built a summer house at Plymouth, Mass., and taken a house in Cambridge for a few years. One of his boys has passed his "preliminaries" for Harvard. The Secretary adds this extract from a recent number of the Boston Transcript on the work of Osgood's singing club:

"Nothing so beautiful in the way of music, we have been told by students and professors of music, exists anywhere in the world as the work of the Boylston Club chorus of this city. Part-singing enough there has been—part-singing by men, so perfect that you ached for a little blunder somewhere, and so much of it that you couldn't tell one song from another, and part-singing by "lady quartets" there has always been, of wonderful finish—but a whole chorus, with female voices as well as male, informed with artistic sensibility and trained to the utmost nicety of execution and expression, was the something unique in art that has been reserved for our Boylston Club to accomplish. In the concert of last evening the club fairly surpassed itself in its bright-toned, dainty and delicious tone-painting."

*ROBERT MENDUM OTIS. The following notice of our deceased classmate is taken from the West Roxbury News of March 27, 1886:—

"Dr. Robert Mendum Otis, whose death occurred at Roslindale on Friday the 19th, was born at Kittery, Me., October 19, 1844. He was the youngest of a family of six children, and his father, an honored citizen of that place, was for many years at the head of the blacksmith shops in the U. S. Navy Yard there. With laudable ambition the father decided to give his youngest son a college education. Young Robert was accordingly sent to Phillips Exeter

Academy, and after due preparation he entered Harvard College, from which he graduated in 1866. Throughout his college course he was industrious, ambitious, and always a quick and ready student, standing well with his associates and giving promise of a useful life. The profession of medicine being selected, he entered the Bellevue Medical School in New York City, from which, after graduation, he returned to his native town and began the practise of his profession. Later he returned to North Cambridge, where for some years he was a practising physician. While in the latter place he engaged in real estate operations, but unfortunately became heavily encumbered at the time of the well-remembered depression in the value of real estate property, about 1870, and lost heavily. Seven years ago Dr. Otis came to Roslindale and offered his services as a physician to the people. But here the natural turn of his mind towards a business career soon manifested itself, and he was not long in seizing upon the opportunity which the rapid growth of Roslindale presented for engaging in real estate operations to good advantage to himself and the community. Four years ago he was stricken with paralysis, from the effects of which he never recovered. Through his instrumentality several large tracts of unproductive and apparently undesirable land have been transformed into pleasant habitable places, and Roslindale to-day owes much to his energy and good judgment for its development and growth during the past five years. Among the personal traits of the deceased were the possession of a marked individuality, with a strong hatred for shams and charlatans, which he never failed to condemn when opportunity presented. His desire was nevertheless to do to others as he would have them do to him; and throughout a long personal acquaintance with him the writer never saw a deviation from his principle. The funeral services occurred at Roslindale Monday last, Rev. W. A. Start, former pastor of the Universalist Church at Cambridge, which the deceased one time attended, assisted by Revs. Garrett Beckman and J. M. Wyman, officiating. The interment took place at Kittery, Me. He leaves a widow and one son, also a daughter by a former marriage. Dr. Otis was a member of Bellevue Lodge, Knights of Honor, and throughout his sickness received a brotherly care from members of the Order. A delegation from the Lodge attended the funeral, and escorted the remains to the church."

We who used daily to meet our classmate in the routine either of duty or of college pleasures will long remember his gentle manner, his pleasant smile, and the conscientious sincerity which seemed to be one of his most distinguishing traits of character.

Am gradually settling down into an agriculturist; occasionally appear on stage or plat-

I then spent three years as principal of the High School at Adams, Mass., returning West after resigning there, and soon accepted my present place (Superintendent of Public Schools, Kendallville, Ind.); this has proved congenial in many ways.
